PHOTOGRAPH GRADE TYPES EXPLANATION SHEET

DRAFT

Four grades (A-D) are available for reproduction of photographs from archive collections.

These grades are determined by the type of paper and processing used to create the print. The life expectancy of all photographs is determined by paper type, developing processes, proper handling, care and storage. The archivist will be happy to answer any question regarding the care, handling and storage of your prints.

GRADE A

This is a very basic print on standard photographic RC paper. Processed quickly and without any detailing. To be used as a research or reference print. The life expectancy of this print with proper care, handling and if stored under proper conditions is 1-20 years.

GRADE B

This is a publication quality print on standard photographic RC paper. Suitable for publication and display. Processed with limited detailing. The life expectancy of this print with proper care, handling and if stored under proper conditions is 1-20 years.

GRADE C

This is a commercial quality print on standard photographic RC paper. Suitable for publication and display. Processed with detailing, custom cropping, or other special instructions. The life expectancy of this print with proper care, handling and if stored under proper conditions is 1-20 years.

GRADE D

This is an archival quality print on special fiber-based photographic paper. Suitable for long term preservation. Processed carefully with detailing, custom cropping, or other special instructions. The life expectancy of this print with proper care, handling and if stored under proper conditions is 50+ years.
